Local Construction Firm Helps Patients

Early in 2005 the Marion Regional Cancer Center was slated to undergo equipment upgrades totaling over $2 million. The goal was to make the facility equivalent or superior to any other cancer center in the region, and the directors were faced with the decision about which construction company to employ. The choices included from larger cities, many of whom routinely revamp existing cancer centers.

A Marion company, Stevens Construction, was chosen, and the results have been dramatic. The construction required refitting an entire building to add a CT scanner, a state-of-the-art radiation therapy accelerator, and an overhaul of information technology systems. All of these changes had to be made while an ongoing group of patients received treatment.

The job was completed earlier this year and the work matched the exacting requirements of the machine manufacturers. More impressively, the professionals at Stevens Construction were unobtrusive throughout, and we had no patient complaints. The noisy parts of the construction were saved for evenings and weekends when the patients were not present.

The Marion area now boasts a cancer center that rivals any in the state, and the efforts of Stevens Construction played a huge role in those patient care improvements.
